

Table of Contents

Editor's Foreword	vii
Preface	1
Introduction	5
Albert's Life and Parisian Intellectual Environment	5
Albert's Works and their Significance	8
Fourteenth-Century Philosophical Disputations	11
The Relative and Chronological Order of Albert's Logical Works	15
The Intellectual Relationship among Albert, Buridan, and Orseme	17
Brief Notes on the Translation	32
A Brief Descriptive Overview of the Issues in Albert's Twenty-Five Disputed Questions	34
Selected Bibliography	37
Albert of Saxony's Twenty-Five Disputed Questions on Logic	41
First Question: Is logic speculative or practical knowledge?	42
Second Question: Can every term be stipulated to signify something?	50
Third Question: Is every term significative?	56
Fourth Question: Do conventional terms signify things or concepts in the mind?	61
Fifth Question: Does every noun signify something other than itself, or what is similar to it in the mind, in speech, or in writing?	64
Sixth Question: Is an infinite noun a consideration of the logician?	72
Seventh Question: Can an oblique term be the subject or predicate of a proposition?	77
Eighth Question: Can a verb be free from tense so that it does not signify with time?	93
Ninth Question: Is a verb always an indicator of that which is said of or predicated of another?	97
Tenth Question: Is every universal a thing?	101
Eleventh Question: Are the categories of underlying subject and quantity different?	108
Twelfth Question: Does a term supposit for every thing it signifies?	113

Thirteenth Question: Is this a good description of supposition: “Supposition is the taking or use of a categorematic term for something in a proposition?”	117
Fourteenth Question: Is this a good definition: “Simple supposition is the taking of a spoken or written term for a mental intention that it is [not] stipulated to signify?”	123
Fifteenth Question: Is the description of material supposition satisfactory?	127
Sixteenth Question: Does a universal affirmative sign confuse the term immediately following it confusedly and distributively, and the term mediately following it merely confusedly?	132
Seventeenth Question: Does a denial confuse a common term following it confusedly and distributively?	137
Eighteenth Question: Does a relative term supposit in the same way as its antecedent?	141
Nineteenth Question: Can the subject term in a present-tense proposition be amplified to supposit for that which is, will be, or can be?	145
Twentieth Question: Is every proposition true or false?	149
Twenty-First Question: Is every proposition affirmative or negative?	154
Twenty-Second Question: Is every proposition is universal, particular, indefinite, or singular?	158
Twenty-Third Question: Is every proposition in which the subject term is a common term determined by a numerical term a universal proposition; for example: “A thousand men run”?	173
Twenty-Fourth Question: Can contradictory propositions be true or false together?	176
Twenty-Fifth Question: Is conversion is possible?	182
Appendix	189
Notes	195
Glossary of Albertinian Terms	225
Table of Parallel Passages in Albert’s Logical Works	235
Index of Key Propositions, Rules, Sophisms, and Theses	245
Index of Concepts and Names	257